'The Good, the Bad and the Ugly – non-native fish in the UK'.

Dr. Rob Britton of Bournemouth University

Following completion of his PhD at the University of Hull that studied the impact of cormorants on inland fish populations, Rob worked for the Environment Agency for several years, developing expertise in areas including the ecology and management of non-native fishes. Following his appointment to a lectureship at Bournemouth University in 2007, he has continued this interest in his research, investigating the ecological impacts, and recreational and economic benefits, of introduced fishes in both the UK and Africa. Of particular interest is how their populations can be better managed to obtain the optimum benefits without impacting upon native biodiversity.
